MALBEC

Malbec is originally from the southwest of France, where it is known as “Côt” and has a tannic, hard style.

Wines with the appellation of Cahors have been produced since the days of the Roman Empire.

1853

Malbec was introduced in Argentina by Michel A. Pouget, a French agronomist hired by the Argentine National Government to carry out the management of the Agricultural Quinta of Mendoza.

1863

The phylloxera plague took a strong hold on France, causing serious problems with the wine industry of that country.

Vines were hard hit and began to deteriorate massively in the southern Rhone.

Argentina was one of the few regions, together with Chile and Cyprus, that remained exempt from phylloxera.

19th CENTURY

Towards the end of the 19th Century, Argentine viticulture experienced exponential development in the hands of Italian and French immigrants.

Malbec, in particular, adapted quickly to the varied terroirs offered by Argentina's rugged landscape and began to produce wines better than in its original land.

FRANCIA

Argentina became the only country to have original Malbec vines of true French heritage.

A superior Malbec was elaborated in oak casks and a star was born.

Malbec is a variety of intense color, with shades of deep violet and aromas of red fruit, such as plums and cherries; notes of violet, spices and minerals.

With oak ageing, it brings out chocolate, vanilla and tobacco flavours.

In the mouth it is characterised by its softness and persistence and the sweetness of its tannins.

MALBEC

Since 2000, Argentine producers have begun to focus on origin, resulting in Malbecs that celebrate the identity of each terroir.

Its noble and versatile character makes Malbec the variety that best reflects the diversity of Argentine wine regions.

The Argentine North stands out for its high altitude, low latitude and high insolation in the region, which gives Malbec a blackish color and a lot of intensity.

Aromatically it is characterised by ripe black fruit and jam, combined with spicy notes of herbs or peppers, typical of the area.

In the mouth it has marked tannins, excellent concentration, texture and very good length.

Located in the center-west of the country, the Cuyo region is influenced by the Andes Mountains, with varied altitudes and very heterogeneous soils.

The Malbecs of Cuyo have a ruby reddish color. Aromatically they are characterised by the presence of fruits such as quince, figs and plums, and notes of caramel.

Wines with alcohol levels that generate sweetness and smoothness in the mouth.

Patagonian Malbec achieves very good maturity due to the characteristics of the region: high latitude, lower altitude, sun exposure and strong winds.

Reddish-black hues are often perceived, and very ripe fruit aromas such as sweet red berries, jam, caramel and raisins, are noticeable in the nose.

In the mouth they have high levels of tannins that give texture and structure to the wines.

ATLANTIC REGION

The Atlantic region stands out for its pronounced thermal amplitude, its proximity to the ocean and the influence of its maritime winds, which give the Malbec intense red colors with violet hues.

Wonderful aromas of liquorice, red fruits and the freshness of menthol are present.

In the mouth this sensation of fruit and freshness is repeated, presenting itself as a stylish, elegant wine, with soft tannins and a long and delicate finish.
